Otis, a large boxer, is licking and slobbering over David "Doc" O'Connor, managing partner at CAA, while Rosie, a mellow basset hound, and Jodi, part duck-tolling retriever and leader of the pack, nuzzle O'Connor's wife, screenwriter Lona Williams (2014's The Dunderheads) at their Brentwood house. All three are rescue dogs. Jodi was originally found wandering the streets of San Bernardino. And if Otis hadn't been adopted by the couple, he surely would have suffered the fate of euthanization at a kill shelter.

The boxer, who has three legs, is "inspiring because he never lives a day of his life like he's missing a leg," says O'Connor, 55. "We presume he got hit by a car and his owners didn't have the wherewithal to take him to a vet. They put him in an overnight drop box at a kill shelter in Idaho, where he was dragging his leg around." Staff at the Animal Adoption Center (AAC) in nearby Jackson, Wyo. (where the couple has a second home), got him out of the kill shelter. Williams — a longtime advocate for animals who serves on the board of the AAC — fell for Otis when she met him. And though the couple (who have a daughter, Lucy, 13, and son, Angus, 9) then had four dogs and her husband was adamant he didn't want another, even O'Connor couldn't stand firm in the face of Otis' boundless affection.

"David was on the phone on the couch, and Otis ran in the room, up on the couch and started licking, and it was game over," recalls Williams, 46, who also is on the board of the Humane Society of the United States.

Friends Animal Society, which has put together NKLA, a new coalition of more than 50 independent organizations working to make Los Angeles a no-kill city by 2017.

Already, the initiative is making a serious impact, with 13,000 animals killed at shelters in 2012, down 4,000 from the previous year. An estimated 3.4 million animals are euthanized annually in the United States. "Once you know the number of adoptable healthy animals killed every year, once you know the horrors of puppy mills, where the mothers languish in cages their entire lives, never touching grass, you can't go back," she says, noting that 20 to 30 percent of the animals in shelters are purebreds.

One of the most important tools in reducing that number further is educating people that most animals aren't in shelters because of behavioral problems but because of lack of identification and owners' life changes such as divorces, deaths in families and economic problems. The Top 10 Dog Breeds in Los Angeles

Chihuahuas don't make the cut, shih tzus do, according to the American Kennel Club's latest rankings By Margaret Bonaparte

No. 1 Bulldog In 2009, the bulldog pushed aside Labradors to become L.A.'s most popular breed. Adam Sandler, Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt are owners, as is Victoria Beckham, whose Coco can be seen on Twitter shopping at Hermes.	No. 2 Labrador retriever Family-friendly Labs still are No. 1 nationally. Local breeder Teresa Bergquist of Susana Labradors, whose puppies have starred in Bridesmaids, explains their appeal: "They're intelligent and can count and memorize."	No. 3 French bulldog The French bulldog, exemplified by Modern Family's Stella, has jumped two spots since 2011. Bred during the late 1800s to be lap warmers, they're seen on the leashes of Reese Witherspoon and Hugh Jackman.	No. 4 German shepherd Employed worldwide as skilled guard dogs, German shepherds are strong, loyal and known as a one-man breed for their allegiance to their owners — Ben Affleck, Nicole Richie and Jennifer Aniston, among them.	No. 5 Golden retriever The friendly golden retriever became a breakout breed after 1997's Air Bud. Up one slot from No. 6 in 2011, these old reliables, used in search-and-rescues and as guide dogs, no doubt signal stability to their industry owners.
No. 6 Yorkshire terrier The Yorkie might have been used as a rat catcher in 19th century England, but nowadays the breed is coveted by celebrities like Miranda Kerr. Highfliers take to their travel-friendly portability and entertaining personalities.	No. 7 Poodle The poodle comes in three sizes — standard, miniature and toy — for owners who like options or are allergic (but don't mind frequent grooming). Blake Lively's toy, Penny, was a constant companion on the set of Gossip Girl.	No. 8 Pomeranian L.A.'s most popular toy breed (Chihuahuas rank at No. 28), Poms demand a lot of attention, which owners like Gwen Stefani happily provide. Channing Tatum and wife Jenna often are photographed walking their Meeka on city trails.	No. 9 Toy spaniel The sweet disposition and trainability of Cavalier King Charles Spaniels makes them great therapy dogs. Julianne Hough has posted about her two dogs on Instagram: "Can't move! Babies are taking care of me."	No. 10 Shih tzu With its long double coat that requires daily brushing, the shih tzu — the breed of Kerry Washington's canine Josie — has been around for a thousand years. It was bred to be a house pet during China's Ming Dynasty.

Top 5 Pet Custody Battles

Spears and Federline in more tranquil times, with Chihuahua Bit-Bit in 2004.

Pets are furry family members to many couples — and can spark nasty custody battles when those couples divorce. But courts often will not rule on pet ownership. "You don't want to be the lawyer going in front of a judge asking to divide a pet," says Freid and Goldsman divorce lawyer Jon S. Summers. When Fido's fate does come before a court, the verdict could be heartbreaking. California law considers pets property, like a TV, so the judge almost always grants ownership to one ex, leaving the other petless. And anything from pet-food receipts to testimony from neighbors and therapists might be used in court to determine the pet's rightful caretaker. But most couples, says Summers, reach pet custody agreements outside the courtroom. Here's who won in five famous battles:

HUGH HEFNER VS. CHRISSY HARRIS
After breaking off their engagement in June 2011, the couple battled over who would win ownership of Cavalier King Charles Spaniel Charlie. Harris originally allowed Hefner to keep Charlie but changed her mind that December. Winner Hefner retained custody as evidenced by both dog and Hef being featured on Nat Geo Wild's Dog Whisperer in July 2012.

BRITNEY SPEARS VS. KEVIN FEDERLINE
During their divorce, Spears lost custody of the couple's two children, Sean Preston and Jayden James. PETA wrote Federline a letter urging him to file for custody of their pets, too, which he did. Winner Inconclusive for the pets; only the divorced parties (and their dog walkers) know. Federline continues to have custody of the kids.

DREW BARRYMORE VS. TOM GREEN
The couple divorced in 2001 after being married for less than six months, then fought for custody of yellow Labrador Flossie, who saved their lives by waking them during a 1998 house fire. Winner Barrymore, Flossie's original owner, won the case.

JON GOSSELIN VS. KATE GOSSELIN
The former reality stars battled over custody of their two German shepherds, Shoka and Nala, who were purchased on an episode of Jon & Kate Plus 8 in February 2009. Jon brought the dogs back to their breeder that September, saying Kate was a negligent owner. Winner Jon lost custody.

TIGER WOODS VS. ELIN NORDEGREN
Nordegren took possession of three of the couple's dogs after Woods' November 2009 car accident exposed to the world his infidelity. During their divorce proceedings, Woods and Nordegren each fought for custody of the dogs. Winner Woods has been seen walking the dogs. — JILLIAN AUBIN AND AUSTIN SIEGEMUND-BROKA

Eli Roth with Monkey (French bulldog)

Photographed by Emily Shur on July 11 at Roth's West Hollywood house

The name Eli Roth conjures images of blood and guts. But there's a softer side to the 41-year-old Hostel helmer. In fact, the man who spawned the phrase "torture porn" sounds more like a spa aesthetician when discussing his precious French bulldog, Monkey. "Her skin has all the natural oils it needs, so it's bad to bathe her too often because she dries out," he coos. "Frenchie's are a delicate breed." The longtime PETA supporter is so indulgent with his rescue pup that he allows her dining-room privileges. "I know this is a terrible habit, but recently I started putting her in a chair at the table. She used to make all kinds of noise while I was eating; I sat her at the table and she calmed down instantly. So now she joins me for dinner." The only caveat: She is forbidden from jumping up and eating Roth's meal. The stern side of Roth does emerge at one point when he issues a time-out, but thanks to obedience training at Bone Sweet Bone in Studio City, Monkey is on her way to becoming a well-behaved pooch — an important feat given her stepping a bit into the spotlight. The 6-month-old dog is currently romantically linked to Moosie, the French bulldog of Paramount senior vp publicity Jessica Rovins. "We always joke about how we're going to arrange puppyrazzi photos," he quips, adding that his dog is not down for anything harsher than a photo flash. "I wanted to bring her to my last location [for The Green Inferno], but she would have gotten eaten by a python. We were filming deep in the Amazon. It's best that she stays local." — TATIANA SIEGEL
